

Novel & Prose

Choose the correct answer

اختر بتتحفظ زي مهي متجودش

- 1- Which of these is an example of a novel? Pride and Prejudice
- 2- "The Lottery" is an example of a: short story
- 3- The Diary of a Young Girl by Anne Frank is a: autobiography
- 4- A memoir focuses on: key personal experience
- 5- Poetry uses which of the following? Rhythm and expressive language
- 6- Lyric poetry is characterized by: Personal and emotional expression
- 7- Tragicomedy mixes: sad and funny elements
- 8- The Importance of Being Earnest by Oscar Wilde is an example of: Farce
- 9- Kurtz's African mistress remains silent throughout the novel, symbolizing: Africa's silence under European interference
- 10- Ivory in Heart of Darkness symbolizes: The greed of Europeans
- 11- The Congo River symbolizes: A barrier between familiar and unknown worlds
- 12- The sepulchral city represents: European civilization with hidden hypocrisy
- 13- The harlequin (Russian sailor) symbolizes: Moral ambiguity
- 14- The theme of alienation in Heart of Darkness shows that prolonged solitude can:
Damage men's minds
- 15- Deception in the novel is seen when: Europeans claim to civilize Africans but exploit them

16- Marlow lies to Kurtz's fiancée about: Kurtz's last words

17- The theme of order and disorder is shown through: The tidy clerk in chaotic surroundings

18- Sanity and insanity in the novel suggest that: The jungle drives some Europeans mad

19- Marlow says he likes what is in the work because it allows him to: Find himself

20- Kurtz is described by Marlow as "hollow to the core," meaning: He lacks

genuine moral substance

21- Violence and cruelty in the novel include: Chained & starved natives, Row of severed heads, Human sacrifices. "All of the above"

22- Marlow works for: A Belgian trading company

Fill in the blanks

أكمل د بق بتقرأه كويس وتعرف مسار الجملة

1. "A Rose for Emily" is a short story about Miss Emily Grierson, who lives in a small town in Mississippi.

2. Miss Emily's father was controlling and would not let her marry.

3. Miss Emily bought arsenic, which people thought she would use to kill herself.

4. Miss Emily became more reclusive, staying in her house for many years.

5. Miss Emily killed Homer Barron by poisoning him.

6. Tobe is Miss Emily's servant and the only person who comes and goes from her house.

7. Homer Barron is a foreman paving the town's sidewalks.

8. Homer Barron is outgoing and lively, often seen laughing with others.
9. Miss Emily resists new systems, like having a mailbox or address.
10. When the smell of death comes from Miss Emily's house, it highlights the distance between her life and ordinary life.
11. The townspeople feel a mix of resentment and pity toward Miss Emily.
12. Colonel Sartoris followed the traditions of Southern chivalry.
13. Saki's real name was Hector Hugh Monroe.
14. After his mother died, Saki moved to England to live with strict relatives.
15. In "The Open Window," Framton Nuttel visits the countryside to relax and improve his nerves.
16. Vera tells Framton a sad story about her aunt's husband and brothers who died while hunting.
17. Mrs. Sappleton talks happily about her husband and brother as if they are still alive.
18. Framton becomes terrified and runs away, thinking he has seen ghosts.
19. Vera is very imaginative and likes to tell made-up stories.
20. One theme of "The Open Window" is the absurdity of etiquette.
- 21- The story makes fun of people who worry too much about their health, a theme called the romance of hypochondria.
- 22- the story shows that young people can be clever and tricky.

Discuss Colonialism and Human Nature in Heart of Darkness

Joseph Conrad's 'Heart of Darkness' is a criticism of European colonialism and a journey into the dark side of human nature. It tells the story of a journey through the Belgian Congo in the late 1800s. It is also a symbolic examination of humanity's deepest flaws.

On the surface, the narrator, Marlow, describes the violent colonization of Africa by the Europeans. He shows how the Roman invasion of Britain was driven by robbery and bloodshed. This contrasts with the white man's desire to "civilize" the Africans. However, when Marlow arrives in Africa, he sees that the Europeans do not help the natives but exploit them. At the Outer Station, he sees the brutal treatment of the African workers, who are overworked and left to die. The natives desperately try to protect their land from being taken by the colonizers.

The colonizers, especially Kurtz, show that their true desire is profit, not civilizing the natives. At first, they appear to support helping the native people. They claim that they want to enlighten them. However, they treat the Africans badly and begin to exploit their natural resources. Marlow himself is not innocent. While he criticizes the colonial system, he is still part of and never tries to stop the cruelty he sees. When Kurtz dies, Marlow lies to his fiancée, pretending that Kurtz's death was noble, thus showing his hypocrisy.

The story's main theme of evil is embodied in Kurtz, who is both monstrous and pitiful. Kurtz's control of the natives shows the results of abusing power. Marlow believes that Kurtz is not a genius, but rather a hollow man who is both evil and powerless in the end. The novel's theme of ambiguity is also important. Many events in Heart of Darkness are left unexplained, and the journey itself seems meaningless. Conrad wants to say that human experience is difficult to tell in words and that our understanding of the world is often limited.

In conclusion, Heart of Darkness shows how colonialism is driven by exploitation, violence, and hypocrisy. It also explores the darkness at the heart of human nature. Through Marlow's journey, Conrad seems to say that we cannot actually understand the horrors of colonialism and human evil.

"A Rose for Emily" is a story about resistance to change. Discuss.

In William Faulkner's "A Rose for Emily", the story is set in the town of Jefferson. It is about the life of Emily Grierson, a woman from an aristocratic family. The story is told by the townspeople, who see and gossip about Emily's increasingly strange behavior over the years. After her father's death, Emily becomes isolated. She finally starts a romantic relationship with a man named Homer Barron, but he disappears under mysterious circumstances. The story ends shockingly when, after Emily's death, the townspeople discover the dead body of Homer Barron in her home. Emily kills her husband, Homer Barron, by poisoning him with arsenic. She killed him to prevent him from leaving her. After his death, she keeps his decaying body in a room of her house, which is discovered only after her death.

William Faulkner's "A Rose for Emily" is a Gothic short story about decay, tradition, and isolation. It takes place in Jefferson, and centers on Emily, an isolated woman whose life is marked by loss and an inability to accept change. The story is told from the viewpoint of the townspeople, who view Emily with pity and curiosity. It uses flashbacks to show important events in Emily's life, such as the death of her father, her brief relationship with her husband, and the mystery of her sealed bedroom. Emily is portrayed as tragic, unable to forget her past or adapt to the changing world. Her decaying home reflects her emotional state.

A key theme in the story is the conflict between tradition and change. Emily sticks to old Southern values and resists modernization, which leads to her isolation and the tragic events at the end of the story. It is discovered that Emily has been keeping her husband's dead body in her house for years, showing how she is able to control her life and rejects societal pressures.

In conclusion, the story explores themes of isolation, tradition, and the consequences of societal pressures.

How Does Saki Use Storytelling as a Weapon in "The Open Window"?

In Saki's "The Open Window, the hero Framton Nuttel is not defeated by a ghost or a monster, but by a clever teenage girl. The story's real power lies in how easily a lie can destroy a person's peace of mind. Framton arrives hoping to calm his nerves, yet he leaves in terror because fifteen-year-old Vera invents a tragic tale about her aunt's "lost" husband and brothers. This shows that the most dangerous weapon is not violence, but a well-told story. Saki criticizes polite society by revealing how manners and hospitality can hide pure manipulation.

The author also mocks Framton's own weakness. Instead of questioning Vera's dramatic account, Framton accepts it without evidence. He is so wrapped up in his own anxiety that he fails to notice the simple clues around him-like the open window itself, which Vera claims is kept open for the dead men. Saki suggests that people like Framton, who are overly cautious and self-absorbed, are easy targets for mischief. The joke is on Framton: his desire for rest and quiet only makes him more foolish and easier to frighten.

In the end, Saki's story is a sharp critique of storytelling as a form of control. Vera triumphs not because she is older or stronger, but because she understands human nature better than the adults around her. The open window becomes a symbol of how everyday settings can be twisted into traps. Saki leaves us laughing at Framton's panic, but also uneasy, because we realize that any of us could be fooled by a confident liar with a sad voice and a straight face.